The Statements of Financial Position and Activities pages have been taken from the financial statements, which were audited by Phillips & Associates, LLC, Certified Public Accountants. Copies of the complete audit may be obtained from House of Ruth’s Administrative Offices, 5 Thomas Circle, NW, Washington, DC 20005 or from our website, www.houseofruth.org.
During 2013, thanks to the generosity of thousands of donors in the community, House of Ruth was able to assist more than 1,100 women and children at our 14 programs in Washington, DC.

The women and children came to us out of homelessness and/or domestic violence. At House of Ruth, they found the tools and opportunities they needed to establish safe and stable lives. We provided housing in safe, nurturing surroundings, as well as comprehensive supportive services tailored to the individual’s needs.

In the warm embrace of a caring staff, the women and children flourished. Fully 81% of families and 86% of single women who “graduated” from our programs moved on to more independent, permanent housing.

Going into 2014, the Board of Directors and staff crafted a Strategic Plan for House of Ruth which renewed our vision and commitment to helping vulnerable women and children stabilize their lives and look ahead to the future. The plan includes:

- Major program and facility enhancements to Kidspace, our child development program;
- Visible leadership and collaboration with organizations that serve homeless populations; and
- Further expansions of best practices in our programs and operations.

We are excited about the future. All that the women and children accomplish at House of Ruth is made possible because of the generous support of our donors. We thank you for your confidence in House of Ruth and in the capacities for change of the women and children we serve.

Sincerely,

Winifred Wilson        Pamela Pinkett
Executive Director     Chair, Board of Directors
Building Better Lives

During 2013, 202 women who were homeless and abused found safe housing and comprehensive supportive services at House of Ruth.

At our five residential programs, staff worked closely with each woman to build upon her strengths and address her challenges. As we got to know the women, we discovered that many of them had experienced abuse throughout their lives, beginning in early childhood. A major focus of our work with each woman, therefore, was on addressing the trauma she had experienced. We taught the women new coping skills so they could move past the abuse they had suffered and function more effectively in their daily lives.

Each woman worked closely with her case manager to identify her goals and develop a plan for achieving them. Most of the women aspired to simple things: to have a safe home, to earn a living wage, to be connected with other people in their lives who were able to be supportive.

After assessment of their strengths and needs, the women were connected with a wide array of supportive services to help them achieve their goals. Critical services, such as case management and counseling, were delivered on-site at the women’s residences at House of Ruth. The case managers connected each woman with other programs providing education and training, as well as legal, medical and dental services. Regular weekly support groups and a variety of social activities helped the women develop connections with the staff and with each other, fostering a supportive community within each residence.

House of Ruth has a capacity of 109 women at five residences. Over the course of the year, more than 200 women were provided with housing and comprehensive recovery services. Among those who left House of Ruth in 2013, fully 86% moved into safe, stable permanent housing.

Contributions from thousands of individuals and organizations in the community, in addition to government grants and contracts, make it possible for House of Ruth to assist these women. They, and we, are very grateful for this support.

Since I’ve been at House of Ruth, I haven’t been afraid any more, that’s the biggest change. People don’t realize how fear wears you down. House of Ruth has given me a home while I get my life back on track. Now, I’m in a culinary arts training program and plan to get a job in a restaurant.

— House of Ruth Resident

I don’t know where I would be without House of Ruth. I truly believe I could not have made it one more night on the streets. House of Ruth has been a godsend. The staff really cares what happens to me. I’ve never had anybody in my corner before.

— House of Ruth Resident
Helping Families Thrive

Throughout the course of 2013, a total of 139 families—including 263 children—were provided with safe, stable housing and comprehensive recovery services at House of Ruth. Among those who graduated from our programs and moved into the community, fully 81% found safe, stable permanent housing.

Most of the families we served became homeless as a result of domestic violence. For many of the mothers, the recent domestic violence was just the tip of the iceberg; they had been dealing with abuse since childhood. That is why we emphasized trauma recovery services at all seven of our programs for families. We also focused on helping the mothers build new parenting skills and form healthy bonds with their children.

For the children, the emphasis was on their physical and emotional well-being. Children under the age of five attended Kidspace, our child and family development center, where their progress toward their developmental milestones was carefully monitored and encouraged. Staff worked with the older children to help them overcome emotional and behavioral issues linked to the instability of their early years.

A case manager worked closely with each family to help the mother define goals for herself and her children and then build a recovery plan to achieve those goals. Weekly supportive group meetings among the women helped them develop both their coping skills and sense of camaraderie. Other groups and one-on-one work led by our life skills trainers emphasized building new skills for daily living, such as budgeting, planning and preparing healthy meals, and managing the family schedule.

Most of the mothers attended training or education programs during the day while their children were in school. Those who had the skills to earn a living wage when they came to House of Ruth were assisted in securing employment.

Support from thousands of concerned individuals and organizations in the community supplemented government grants and contracts to enable House of Ruth to provide housing and services to 139 families who were homeless and abused in 2013. House of Ruth and the families greatly appreciate this support.

We spent the entire first year of my son’s life in rapid transition, living in 15 or 20 different places and it really took its toll. House of Ruth is what I was hoping for, a women’s and children’s refuge where we could actually feel safe. Now I have time and space to breathe and to make a realistic plan for the future.

—House of Ruth Resident

My children and I became homeless because we were running from domestic violence. We were homeless for 45 days; then we came to House of Ruth. I’m here to work on my issues. I don’t ever want to be in that position again where I am depending on someone else to have a place to live. The staff gives me and my children a lot of support. They are motivators. They help me believe that I can do better.

—House of Ruth Resident
Serving the Community

During 2013, 86 young children from homeless families received the interventions and support they needed to overcome developmental delays at Kidspace, House of Ruth’s child and family development center. The children, who ranged in age from six weeks through five years old, came from families living at House of Ruth and from other providers of housing for homeless families. All of the children had developmental delays when they arrived at Kidspace. To help the children reach their developmental milestones, the staff at Kidspace provided warm, nurturing support to each child. Speech and language therapists, as well as occupational therapists, worked with all of the children in the classrooms, and provided one-on-one sessions to children with the greatest delays. Psychotherapy, in the form of play therapy, was also provided to the children who were the most severely affected by trauma.

As a result of the enriched curriculum and work of the teachers and therapists, all of the children made substantial progress toward their developmental milestones at Kidspace last year.

At the Domestic Violence Support Center, more than 300 women received free counseling and/or case management services to help them cope with the effects of domestic violence.

In-depth psychotherapy helped the women uncover and understand the links between the childhood abuse many of them had suffered and adult domestic violence. A team of five skilled therapists introduced the women to new coping mechanisms to help them move beyond the trauma of abuse and function better in their daily lives.

In addition to psychotherapy, the staff provided case management—practical hands-on assistance to help the women connect with resources for housing, employment, legal services, and child care.

Unlike the women at our other programs, all of whom were impoverished and homeless, women came to the Domestic Violence Support Center from all walks of life.

Both Kidspace and the Domestic Violence Support Center rely on gifts from generous friends in the community to carry on their important work. Thank you!

Kidspace is a blessing. Because of Kidspace, my oldest child was skipped ahead a grade in school. He was so advanced that he went right into first grade. I think it is because of the staff. They are so gentle and caring with the children.

—House of Ruth Resident

I was in a domestic violence situation that left me and my children out on the street with no place to go. My therapist (at the Domestic Violence Support Center) helped me figure out my options and get into housing at House of Ruth. I’m still getting therapy to help me cope with the trauma in my past. Thanks to my therapist, I can deal with things so much better now.

AFCEA Bethesda leaders Leslie Steele and Stephanie Hill (left and middle) made friends with a child at Kidspace when they came to deliver a major gift to House of Ruth's Executive Director, Winifred Wilson (right). AFCEA Bethesda is donating $275,000 this year to help strengthen House of Ruth’s programs for children and plans to make gifts of a similar amount for at least the next two years. This year’s funds were raised from the federal information technology community at AFCEA Bethesda’s spring gala, A Night for the Children.
